I'm not sure if they're all "stylized" or if I just blew everything to hell and back. They're also very long; a minute by my flute tone generator took almost 6 minutes in total. It occurred to me that maybe this doesn't quite sound as it should, because I haven't mentioned that I tried to record any of the performances on a separate mics. I can't find the recording, which sucks, because it actually sounds surprisingly good. I was also thinking about trying to isolate the "stage" voice from the "off stage" one, but I've never done that before, so I'm not sure how it would sound when mixed. Thoughts? p.s. I feel the need to say I'm sorry if the passion in my voice was too much for some readers, but frankly it's nice to get such an honest reaction from someone. I'm mostly surprised because it's the first time I've ever really put my heart into a recording. My Personal Experience With Voice-over Hi folks, I can't remember how long I've been recording, but the truth is that I've been recording for about as long as I've been in a band. I have a habit of recording almost anything, including my own voice, even if it's not audio. I don't think I've ever written or drawn something worth of being here. I recorded my own voice a lot, but it was something I did during loud performances, when I needed to keep a party going, and kind of fade out. I took the microphone apart, shoved it in my mouth, and twisted the microphone plug. So I don't think it was ever something I did for the purpose of voice-overs. I didn't think of it like this until a week or two ago, when I was reading the recording section of a site called The Voice and I saw an ad for a voice-over contest, which would have paid quite a bit of money. This spurred me to record myself for the contest, and I finished it off
