The present pilot study evaluated the predictive value of urinary 8-hydroxy-2'-deoxyguanosine (8-OHdG) levels at 2 months after severe traumatic brain injury (TBI) for the prognosis of TBI in children. In this prospective study, 44 consecutive children with severe TBI were enrolled and divided into two groups: a TBI group of 10 children without disability, and a TBI with disability group of 34 children with persistent disability. Urinary 8-OHdG levels at 2 months after TBI were compared between the two groups. 8-OHdG levels were significantly higher in the TBI with disability group than in the TBI group. The area under the curve of 8-OHdG for the prediction of a persistent disability at 2 months after TBI was 0.813. Urinary 8-OHdG level at 2 months after severe TBI in children was a predictor of persistent disability at 2 months after TBI. Further studies are needed to assess whether this increase in the urinary 8-OHdG levels predicts long-term outcome after TBI. Protective effect of a quinolone antibacterial agent, KRM-1648, against experimental colitis in mice. Increasing evidence suggests that overproduction of reactive oxygen species (ROS) is involved in the pathogenesis of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD). Therefore, ROS-inhibitory agents could be a new therapeutic approach for IBD. In order to investigate the efficacy of a quinolone antibacterial agent, KRM-1648, for the management of IBD, we studied the effect of KRM-1648 in a dextran sulfate sodium (DSS)-
