The party says the assembly is supposed to be a stronghold of the Socialists, which it has yet to do. The support of the Basque Nationalist Party (PNV) is important as it can block other parties. They will have to show that they can govern, especially because they are in conflict with the rest of the country over the region of Catalonia. The Socialists were the biggest winners on Sunday, taking 114 of the 350 seats in the Spanish parliament, an increase of more than 20 seats over the Socialists' previous result in 2007, according to a new opinion poll. "If we can manage to get a majority in the regional parliament, we'll be able to form the government," said Socialist Party President Pedro Sánchez. But he added that he would not be drawn on whether that government would be the next Prime Minister Sánchez, or the defense minister, José Luis Ayuso, could become prime minister instead. At 4 p.m. local time, it appeared that the Socialists had won enough seats in the 700-seat parliament to give them a majority. If that holds, the Socialists will
