Macros are powerful features in any GPS receiver that allow you to create useful functions in record time. You can create a macro that will help you do a lot of things, and the powerful editor in GPSMapEdit allows you to edit your macros in a simple and straightforward way. The command line tool has a more restricted range of functions, but it will serve you well if you are interested in creating more elaborate functions. Comments Edit Your Comment Great review. I will give this software a try as a way to get my family to use a proper map making program for when they are driving. This will be easier to make than detailed manual edits. Posted on 2015-07-18 20:17 abdulu4095 It's one thing to talk about having to create an account and another to have a client install and run the software for you. From the video we saw it took about five minutes. So it doesn't really take long to do it on a regular basis and that's what I'm after. Posted on 2015-07-19 23:08 barno The video was pretty informative, I've used the Garmin GPSMapEdit software in the past and liked it. But I'd rather have a simple, straight forward application that works with multiple formats, and doesn't need to be installed.

Seems like this one is more about a visual appearance that's easier to use on the go than about being easy to use. Posted on 2015-07-21 18:35 sktech I like this product but i did notice that it doesn't open.pbk files (I use these on my iphone). I know you can copy and paste files and such, but it would be great if it would open a bkf when you try to save it. Posted on 2015-07-23 11:53 navigos I was searching a decent solution for a trip planner and after trying these software I really found this one. It's lightweight, easy to use and the integration with the device makes the control even easier. Posted on 2015-07-23 14:52 erotica

So I have two questions: 1. Will I be able to create macros without ever having a GPS. 2. Can I create a macro to create routes. Posted on 2015-07-23 17:29 christiancardelan 1d6a3396d6

Map and viewing functions - Create, view and edit map files and export them to many formats to be sent to other GPS devices. (.prj) and load it to GPSMapEdit Portable. Right-click and select Open. Click View and set the map you want to use. Right-click and select Create Map. You can select a suitable location for viewing by clicking the left mouse button and dragging. The map will be created, which will be in full screen. You can zoom in or out using the mouse scroll wheel. Save the map to a file (.prj). The file type depends on the GPS device type. For example, if the GPS device is a Garmin GPS, then save it as "Garmin.gxt" (the "." character separates the extension from the file type). If the file type of the GPS device is "TXT", and the file has a "gpx" extension, then save it as "GPSMapEdit.gpx". The basic format of .gpx file has a " tags with the map data. Open the .prj file in a text editor like Notepad. The map data and necessary tags are all listed in a file. Save the file and load it into GPSMapEdit Portable. Editor has been around for a while now, and I've always considered myself lucky to have purchased an older version, which was released in the summer of 2005. The software was originally released for the venerable GeoExplorer III, but was later ported to the newer hardware from the same company, so it has been used with only minor differences in the code. The only difference I could find is the interface, which has been redesigned
