Q: Performing a recursive search using recursion I was asked to write a recursive function that would search the word "match" in a user input and would return "Found" if the input contains the word "match" and "Not found" if the input does not contain the word "match". I have written the code and it works fine and I'm just not sure if the code I wrote is the most efficient way of doing it.

#include <string.h>
#include <stdio.h>
#include <stdlib.h>
#define MAXLEN 20
char str[MAXLEN];
void search_word(char *str) {
    if(strlen(str) > 0) {
        if(str[0] == 'm') {
            if(str[strlen(str)-1] == 't') { printf("Found");
            }
        }
    }
}
```
