Something Wonderful - - Disney HURTIN GATEWOOD: Simon Says Hello my wanderers, I would like to share some of my recent sketches. My favourite is this Rosebud (yes - that's the name my son is going to give this frog). I love the way her expression turned out. She is going to look great in my next picture which is a "Digging" scene. @ Tick Tock - 20th October Waterline - 27th October Father's Day - 7th November The French - 14th November The Roses - 17th November @ - 20th December Next time I will be posting some of my plaster work. I have almost completed a scene of a "Digging" Abstract: Liabilities surrounding land-use decisions for protection of soil quality and carbon storage are mounting, yet the conditions that enable vulnerability and resilience exist within many rural communities and across local landscapes. To this end, we present the first comprehensive analysis of the potential resilience of households to household soil quality in rural Montana, leveraging the carbon conserving attributes of household soil and turf management in particular. Our findings show that the resilience of rural households to negative impacts of soil quality degradation in Montana and elsewhere, rests on a critical understanding of community, political, and policy incentives, more so than internal household soil quality attributes. In aggregate, these incentives lead to a valuation of the household turf as a "free farm" and the value of a household's production from the turf is overwhelmingly low relative to those accruing from cropland. As such, we estimate that the principal value of house/yard management derives from the collective role of households as a mechanism for the protection of regional topsoil, and that this value is not captured in market prices as described by conventional agronomic approaches. To the extent that insurance services are provided by non-government, private sources, this research represents a first step in quantifying the social cost of illness due to soil degradation. Our study indicates that household management alone can be an effective mechanism for protecting the soil and decreasing the overall cost to society due to land use/soil management impacts. More broadly, we show how extension and other extension services can be applied to support health impacts. It's been a while since we've posted to this blog. It was a lot of fun to redo our presentation for

is so bad. Also, there's so much fight. It's a drama in between [the fights]. Anyway, he was really good in his role and played very well. Was it really that bad that you couldn't find a director to work with? Maybe they thought that a female director was way too difficult to work with. I was probably too emotional and intense. That might be the cause. The director you were working with were they successful in Korea? They were in the national music scene. They were like the U.S. equivalent of Good Charlotte (laughs). I met them when I was young. I was a part of their first group. When I debuted, I did not do that well. That might have played a part in it. How was it to work with [a Korean director], when you are known for your quirky acting? I feel uncomfortable on set because I don't have that much time to work with them. Because I'm always tired. So I feel really uncomfortable. You've mentioned that you grew up having images of America in your head. Is it something that you want to face? I wanted to show the Korean side of me. I wanted to show the darkness of Korea and show the beautiful side of Korea, too. How did you go about doing that? I think that I understand the Korean psyche. I am a person who doesn't lie. I am naturally honest. I don't like to lie. I am not diplomatic. I am not that way. I believe in the truth. I am going to show that through my acting. I think I am someone who is going to get on the nerves of a Korean. I'm not going to bother anyone, but everyone will tell me if it bothers them. What's next for you? I don't really know. I hope for a bad movie. I don't know what I'm going to do. But I would like to be a part of the world theater again. Have you considered going back to acting in Europe? I'm not sure. I'm not sure. It would be difficult for you to do that because you're so happy in Korea right now. Yeah. I'm not sure.
