Q: How do I tell a Java program to wait until an AsyncTask completes on a gmail account? I have an android app that has 2 buttons that send mails via google account. I want to execute one action right after the other in the order they are pressed. One action uses an email address and the other action uses a mobile phone number. I want the code to wait for one to finish before executing the other. What is the best way to do this? I looked at AsyncTask and ProgressDialog. Is there another way to do this? Here is the code to send an email:

String address = "myEmail@gmail.com"; String subject = "Subject"; String msg = "This is an important message"; try { StringBuilder addressBody = new StringBuilder(); addressBody.append("To: " + address + " "); addressBody.append("From: " + null + " "); addressBody.append("Subject: " + subject + " "); addressBody.append(" ");
addressBody.append("The message is: "); addressBody.append(msg + " "); String mailUrl =
""; HttpClient httpClient = new DefaultHttpClient(); HttpPost httpPost = new HttpPost(mailUrl + "send"); httpPost.setHeader("Content-type", "application/x-www-form-urlencoded"); httpPost.setHeader("Authorization", "Bearer
