(disambiguation)C-reactive protein, leptin, and obesity. Leptin, a hormone secreted by adipose tissue, is a 16 kDa protein hormone that plays a key role in the regulation of body weight.
Circulating concentrations of leptin are elevated in obese subjects, but decrease rapidly during weight loss.

Leptin is an appetite-suppressing hormone that plays a role in the modulation of energy expenditure.

Leptin has also been associated with the presence and severity of coronary artery disease, as well as with stroke and cardiovascular events. It has been postulated that leptin has a role in the pathophysiology of atherosclerosis, mainly through oxidative stress mechanisms. This review summarizes the current knowledge on leptin and its potential effects in the pathogenesis of background of Word documents generated with a program I am developing. I do not know the page's position within the document, and there may be multiple pages in a single document. I am currently able to obtain the colour of the text in a given page, but no matter what I do, I am unable to identify the colour of the background of that page, even though the page's position is perfectly known. Here is what I've tried: Procedure: Set the app to generate the document with its default colour. Set the application to save the document in a specific location and store the file extension. Open this document with a more specific application. Get the contents of this document as a string. The string now contains the colour of the background of the document. Step 3 now gives no information about the background. As an example, the string from step 3 looks like this: 00000373B38303077494E3E700343535A6E3E3E70

Step 4, using a more specific application, now gives information
