The endorsement has a few reasons to recommend it to readers, as they note that the new electronic currency could be used to sidestep banks and government regulation. Bitcoin is a decentralized system that does not rely on a central authority for issuance or transfer of funds. The editorial also notes that banks and other financial institutions might lose something in the slow adoption of Bitcoin since they are in the business of creating money. Banks currently create money through lending and create interest on the difference between what they loan out and what they receive. Banks create money through credit and get that money back in interest. Bitcoin could be a way of sidestepping this system, while still keeping banks happy. The endorsement notes that the new electronic currency is not subject to the turmoil that has affected all of the major currencies, particularly c6a93da74d
